Listening to Wilful Missing is like repeatedly having your heart broken and breathe stolen (in a good way)

2011 was a pivotal year for Wilful Missing. On the back of two well-received EPs (2009's Vast Atlantic, and 2010's Loose Ends), the band were catapulted into the limelight, as four of their songs featured in the BBC TV drama, Waterloo Road.

Three of these songs were as yet unreleased. There was an immediate online buzz as fans of Waterloo Road sought to find out how and when they would be able to get these songs.

Now, with the release of their debut album, Molehills out of Mountains, Wilful Missing will officially release these three songs that fans of Waterloo Road have been eagerly anticipating. 'Constitution Failed' and 'Cry For The City', are included on the album, while 'Blue Poetry' will be the b-side to a future single.

Molehills out of Mountains also includes an award-winning song in 'The Waltz'. Along with film-makers Little Red Light, Wilful Missing won the 2011 2 Weeks 2 Make It music video competition in Sheffield with 'The Waltz'. See the official video here:

Wilful Missing have a unique cross-genre, cross-generational, appeal, due to their outstanding musicianship and songcraft. Sam Kipling's emotionally charged, yet intimate, vocals draw the listener in, and the band's attention to detail means there is plenty to pick up on with repeated listens.

The distinctive album artwork for Molehills out of Mountains was designed by the band's multi-talented drummer, Ruth Viqueira. The groundbreaking design sees the vinyl version of the album expand upon, rather than simply replicate, the CD art. A special fans' QR code is also included in all formats of the album.
